Equipping you for Salvation Army financial administration

Brought to you by the Territorial Finance Support Team, in conjunction with the Centre for Leadership Development, Booth College of Mission

21-23 November 2012

At Booth College of Mission, Upper Hutt

Course content

This course is hands on and practical. You'll also meet others who share similar responsibilities. The course covers:

- Income—including banking, invoicing, policies and procedures
- Financial Statements—balance sheets, income and expenditure
- Budgets
- Basic accounting and journals
- Software: Technology One
- Accounts payable
- GST

The course includes follow-up work-based assessment. Coaching may then be available for any areas in which you require further development or training.

We know The Salvation Army is called to be 'good stewards' of everything that God has given us, including finances. But do you need an accounting degree to help your Corps or Centre run its finances? The good news is—you don't.

This short course has been prepared by experts to equip people involved in their corps or centre finances around The Salvation Army's financial procedures and systems. You'll learn practical tools and tips. Administering Salvation Army finances accurately and efficiently is an important part of being connected, streamlined and mission-focussed. If you're a corps officer, administrator or volunteer, you play a vital role in this ministry.

Who is it for?

This course is for Salvation Army treasurers, secretaries, finance administrators, business administrators, corps officers, and volunteers who help with finances at The Salvation Army.

If you'd like to attend, talk to your corps officer, or your divisional or nationally-managed programme finance representative.
